Mr. Genscher said that when he met Mr. Gromyko and the late Soviet president, Leonid I. Brezhnev, in Moscow in 1980, "They shared our view that the British and French weapons are strategic," that is, designed for national defense and not for the general defense of Wastern Franch Western Enrope. But the current Soviet leader

Yuri V. Andropov, has insisted that the British and French weapons should be included in the European equation of intermediate-range weapons and that the Soviet Union should be allowed 162 werheads to offset them. This has proved the main obstacle at the Geneva talks. Mr. Genscher said Mr. Gromyko now describes the French and British systems as having a dual role one strategic and one intermediate. "I find this remarkable — re-markable in a positive sense," Mr.

Military Chief Says Officer Decided to Fire Because Plane Was Spying

By John F. Burns New York Times Service

MOSCOW — The Soviet Union's top ranking military officer, Marshal Nikolai V. Ogarkov, said Friday that it was "not an accident or an error" when a Soviet fighter shot down a Korean Air Lines Boeing 747 jetliner over the Sea of Japan.

Marshal Ogarkov, chief of the eneral staff of the Soviet armed forces, said at a news conference that the decision "to stop the flight" of the airliner was taken by a district commander of the Air Defense Forces when he and other local officers had concluded that the aircraft was on a spying mission over top-secret military bases.

Gromyko Discusses Jet With French

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatche PARIS - The Soviet foreign minister, Andrei A. Gromyko, offered "long explanations" Friday of last week's shooting down of a South Korean airliner, in a two-hour meeting with President François Mitterrand, a presidential spokesman said.

The spokesman, Michel Vauzelle, also said Mr. Mitterrand told Mr. Gromyko in "language with-out any concessions" of France's anger at the destruction of the Boeing 747 with 269 aboard.

Mr. Mitterrand then offered Mr. Gromyko an outline of a proposal to amend international civil aviation law to specifically ban the use or threat of force against civilian airliners.

During the discussion on the jet, Mr. Gromyko gave Mr. Mitterrand "long explanations" on the downing of the plane, Mr. Vanzelle said. He did not elaborate.

Mr. Vauzelle added that the incident was "obviously a major topic" of the meeting, but was only one of a wide range of "problems that could endanger world peace" that were discussed

In discussing disarmament, Mr. Mitterrand firmly repeated the French position that its nuclear weapons were not to be included in the U.S.-Soviet talks in Geneva on medium-range nuclear missiles.

Other topics included Poland "and in general, respect for human rights," Afghanistan, the Middle East, Africa and Chad and bilateral questions, Mr. Vauzelle said. in a statement after the meeting, Scientists expressed serious concern over indications that an eight; inch, unidentified object hit the satellite 23 seconds after it was put into space last week from Challenger's cargo bay, the Indian Space Research Organization said. The scientists said it was unclear whether the object came from Challenger's cargo bay or from space.

After its launching, the satellite had failed to open some of its solat panels, threatening its lifespan and hampering its ability to find a preselected geostationary orbit. The solar panels are the main source of power for Insat-1B, which is to be used for telecommunications, meteoology and television and radio broadcasts.

Polish Writers Protest Ban on Union WARSAW (WP) - A group of Polish writers has protested the dissolution last month of the writers union, accusing the Communist authorities of trying to eliminate "all independent centers of creative endeavor" in Poland.

A 17-page appeal signed by all but one of the 15 presidium members of the union and sent to the Ministry of Internal Affairs criticizes officials rie said the responsibility was borne "by the people who sent people to their peril" for "their own intelligence aims."

The union leadership resisted and the association was ordered out of existence Aug. 19.

Since its founding 63 years ago, the Polish writers union had been a regarded as the nation's most influential organization of creative artists, and the authorities were clearly hesitant about outlawing it. The dissolution of the union, the statement said, will lead to "huge and not easily reparable damage done not only to the literary community but to the whole Polish society and, in historic terms, to Polish culture."

Norway Will Vote in Local Elections

OSLO (AP) — A local election campaign fought mainly on national economic issues ended Friday night as Norwegians prepared to vote for members of 19 county and 450 municipal councils.

Voting is scheduled Sunday and Monday, with most voting taking place the second day. On a national basis, experts were predicting only minor changes in party strength from a national election two years ago.

2 Nigeria States to Hold Delayed Vote LAGOS, Nigeria (AP) — The Nigerian states of Oyo and Ondo, wracked by election violence last month that claimed at least 43 lives, will begin their final rounds of balloting Wednesday, the Federal Electoral Commission announced Friday.

The commission ordered an indefinite postponement of elections in the two states following the trouble. The chairman of the commission, Justice Victor Ovie-Whiskey, said he hopes the governors of Oyo and Ondo will appeal to their people to keep the peace this time. The violence crupted after governors in the two states, which had been strongholds of the Unity Party, were ousted by candidates from the dominant National Party of

Agency in U.S. Tentatively Approves Smoking Ban on Short-Range Flights

WASHINGTON - A ban on smoking on short airline flights has been tentatively approved by the Civil Aeronautics Board and could be in effect by year's end, the board has announced.

The agency voted 4 to 0 Wednesday in favor of a proposed rule that would forbid smoking on commercial flights lasting an hour or less, a spokesman, Wallace Stefany, said Thursday. The board left open the option of extending the ban to two-hour flights if such a measure won enough backing.

The decision will depend on the consensus of comments the Civil Aeronautics Board, a federal agency, will solicit when it advertises the proposed rule change in the Federal Register, probably within the next two weeks, Mr. Stefany said.

Interested parties would be allowed 45 days for formal written comments. Another 20 days would be set aside for written responses, with additional time to be allowed for oral arguments after all briefs are filed. Under this schedule, action on a final rule can be expected by late

The bird watchers peer at it through binoculars and take its picture, and the "listers" check it on their list of sightings. A special "reef heron hot line" established by the Audubon Society says the bird is not a runaway from some nearby aviary because it is not on the international list of captive species. The bird is about the size of a duck with distinctive feet known as "yellow slippers." It normally stays in the tropical portions of coastal West Africa. Some say it crossed the Equator and was blown off course by a tropical storm. Some say it might have been a stowaway on TV news has a new look starting this week on the four major networks. The three commercial networks will switch to one anchorman in New York: Dan Rather for CBS, Tom Brokaw for NBC and Peter Jen-nings for ABC. The networks are betting on personalities to keep ratings up, but some commentators fear the loss of anchormen in Washington may cost viewers diplomatic and political insights.

While discussion about finances is only starting, the Democratic Party has acted to restore party discipline, which was relaxed by procedures introduced at the tumultuous party convention in 1968.

The Democrats have moved forward the dates of their primary elections and bunched the voting days in key states, a change that penalizes newcomers and benefits candidates with party backing. Similarly, the new rules guarantee that nearly a fifth of the delegates at the nominating convention will be public or party office-holders in effect, the party pros.

Reagan Proposes To Purge Laws of Sex-Bias Language

By Marjorie Hunter New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - President insensitive to women's issues by proposing to eliminate sexually dis-criminating language from a number of federal laws.

William B. Reynolds, the assistant attorney general for civil rights, when asked if most of the proposed changes were merely "cosmetic," replied: "That's right." But Mr. Reynolds said the adnistration's total program for eradicating sex discrimination through forceful litigation, changes in current laws and proposals for new legislation added up to "an impressive record" that should be considered a viable alternative to the Equal Rights Amendment sought by feminist activists.

Mr. Reagan has been stung repeatedly in recent months by pro-tests of numerous women, including some within his own Republican Party, that he has not actively sought to end sex discrimination. This and his opposition to the proposed Equal Rights Amend-ment have been linked to the creation of the "gender gap," the phe-nomenon of Mr. Reagan being far less popular among women than among men.

The latest criticism of the president on this issue came two weeks ago, when Barbara Honegger, a Justice Department aide who worked on the project to identify her $37,000-a-year job after terming the program a "sham."

The president and the Justice Department agreed, however, that no changes be made in laws barring women from being drafted and from serving in combat. In submitting his report to the president, Attorney General William French Smith noted:

"In recent months, the administration has come under attack for an alleged insensitivity to the interests and rights of women. Indians and Citizens of Mixed Race Might Get Chambers; Blacks Wouldn't

The Associated Press

CAPE TOWN — After months of debate, the white parliament of South Africa endorsed Friday a new constitution creating legisla-tive chambers for the mixed race and Indian minorities.

The proposed constitution represents the first move away from exchisive white rule since the National Party took power 35 years ago. The measure must be approved in a referendum by white voters Nov. 2. The vote of 119-35 in favor of the constitution was assured since the Nationalists hold two-thirds of the 178 seats in the assembly. The outcome of the referendum is less certain because of the threat of the combined opposition of white conservatives against any concessions and progressives who the constitution entrenches

The Progressive Federal Party voted against it because the consti tution ignores the voteless black majority of nearly 21 million, who continue to be considered citizens of 10 tribal homelands. The party also said the new system was weighted in favor of whites and POZZUOLI, Italy - After almost 10 months of daily earth tremors, the 65,000 people of this town adjoining Naples are running away, camping out, being evacuated or brooding about what they should do.

"In a population that has been under continuous stress for almost a year, there reigns a most under-standable collective hysteria," said Captain Vittorio Tomasone, who as the Pozzuoli chief of the carabinieri, the national police force, is responsible for the town's safety. "When one night there are no tremors, they dream one up."

The people of this working-class town of run-down houses and garbage-littered streets, situated on the Gulf of Naples, have not dreamed their tremors lately. From November to about two weeks ago, they had occurred only periodicalfear," Mrs. Lucignano said, nod-

That afternoon, thousands ran out of their houses. Some got into cars and drove away, mainly to Naples. Others rushed onto the coastal Via di Napoli and have camped along that street since then. The exodus continues.

"Fears multiply geometrically in this atmosphere." Captain Tomasone said. In fact, he added, except for bruises suffered by 32 people on Sunday, the only ills were probably induced by fear.

He says there was real danger to inhabitants of 67 houses that had been found so damaged as to offer no security against strong tremors. These people are being housed in tents, trailors and bungalows on camperounds nearby.

Ironically, Captain Tomasone said, many were reluctant to leave home because they remembered that thousands of people who moved into temporary housing in the great earthquake in the Naples area in 1979 are still confined to those quarters, now dilapidated.

But in the City Engineer's Office, furious men banged on tables, called each other and officials by names considered particularly harsh in southern Italy and threatened violence if inspectors did not go to their houses to declare them unfit for habitation. A nice insight into the mentality of the day is given by a series of five painted wooden tablets that were originally the covers to the annual report of the auditors of the city of Siena, a body known as La Biccherna. The tablets all show one or two men dutifully counting money, display the family shields of the four auditors of the year and carry an inscription to the effect that "This is the book of receipts and expenditures of the Bicchema of the city of Siena."

An abundance of preciously illuminated manuscripts and works of goldsmiths and silversmiths more precious still complete the show, while the catalog reminds us that a close tie existed in those days between all the arts, a silversmith's reliquary serving as a model for the dome of the cathedral while an illuminator of manuscripts, such as Master Giovanni, could take time out to direct work on the building of Siena's town hall. ## Of Balloons and Artful Fans

By Souren Melikian International Herald Tribune

PARIS — It is unusual for a French auctioneer to quit the auction world, and even more so that one should go into dealing. Whereas in Anglo-Saxon countries, holding auctions is like any other business activity, French auctioneers are judicial officers subject to the authority of the Ministry of Justice. An auctioneer who leaves the profession is a bit like an officer who leaves the army -- he tears nimself off from a caste.

Michel Maignan, who operated at the Drouot auction house from 1969 to 1982, has just done this. In May, he opened his own gallery, Duvelleroy, at 25 Rue de Lille, inaugurating it with an exhibition called "Space Conquest Bicentennial." This was in reference to June 5, 1783, when Joseph Michel Montgolfier, who, with his brother Etienne, invented the hot air balloon made his first successful ascent at Annonay, near Lyons.

Less than two months clapsed before another Frenchman, Alexandre Charles, went up in a hydrogen-inflated contrivance that flew from the Champ de Mars in Paris to Gonesse, a few miles away. It all culminated on Dec. 1, with the ascent of Charles and Louis Robert from the Tuileries Gardens.

To Parisians, this was at least as sensational as John Glenn's flight into space in the 20th century. Marie Antoinette watched it from the balcony at the Tuileries Palace, while an estimated 400,000 spectators, half the Paris populace, crowded the gardens, the Place The Paton Gallery opens its Louis XV (now Place de la Conthird exhibition season with work corde) and the countryside, which by three of the gallery's young art-

There is no handbook on how to solitary horseman. date or localize such a piece. Tulips, Maignan notes, are the first clue. "Tulipomania," as the great fad for the newly developed flower was known, had died out by 1650. Black grounds, on the other hand, were popular in Louis XIII period tapestries. The fan may therefore be dated to about 1630-40 and safely attributed to France.

THE ART MARKET

It would be hard to find anything very much earlier. As far as Maignan has been able to ascertain, the oldest fans known to have survived into the last century should be in the Louvre. An inventory of royal objects compiled at the request of Napoleon III mentions one belonging to Diane de Poitiers, another to Catherine de Médicis. But, Maignan says, with a hint of amusement, as well as of irustrated curiosity, no one at the Louvre was able to enlighten him as to their where-By the 18th century, fans were Maignan has only just discovered a sketch in pencil by Ingres that carries a dedication about which he has not had time to do any research. Later, fans were painted by Degas — of which 23 are recorded — by Manet and Berthe Morisot.

In the 20th century, the great modern masters turned away from such light-hearted affairs, leaving the field to advertising draftsmen. Maignan exhibits a fan advertising champagne by the French cartoonist Sem datable to about 1910 and priced at 600 francs (about $75), which makes it one of the cheapest original works of 20th-century art this reporter has seen this year. # Theater in China Emerges Carefully From the Maoist Era

By Christopher S. Wren New York Times Service

 $B^{\,\mathrm{EUING}}$  — The political message used to be the only medium in contemporary Chinese the-ater. During the 1966-76 Cultural Revolution, ideologues even dictated the plots and sent playwrights to research the details firsthand among the masses, who enjoyed final script approval.

Those were the years when Ying Ruocheng and his fellow actors at Bening's People's Art Theater were planting rice on the farm or making kites in the rehearsal halls for lack of anything more sensible to do. Following the death of Chairman Mao and the jailing of his widow Jiang Qing, a former Shanghai actress who dominated the radical clique now castigated as the Gang of Four, Chinese theater has emerged from the shadow of the Cultural Revolution - though hardly from all political constraints. "A few years ago, we were talking about the remnant fear in the heart of the artists," Ying said. They felt afraid. I think that's mostly gone."

Ying recently appeared as Ku-blai Khan in the mini-series "Marco Polo," co-produced by China, Italy, the United States and Japan, a supporting role that obscured his stature as one of China's foremost actors and directors. In Beijing. Ying is far better known as Willy Loman in a watershed production of Arthur Miller's "Death of a Salesman," which has mesmerized packed audiences for more than

You must have a message that positive characters must be before you have a play, which is more prominent than negative nonsense, of course," Ying saidin ones, that heroic characters must have something to say.'

Still, Chinese theater remains beholden to the Communist Party. Dramatists are bound by duty to support socialist ethics by giving people positive, lasting encouragement through their artistic productions," Zhou Yang, a top cultural commissar, told playwrights in one pep talk last year. Yet the success-ful run of "The Death of a Salesman" testifies to a greater leeway given by the party and the ministry

In recent Chinese plays, there has been more realistic discussion of social problems. "If I Were Real," which dealt with privilege among the children of party functionaries, was restricted to select audiences when it premiered in 1979. There was no such caution in 1981 with "Who Is Stronger?" another play that depicted with candor a factory manager's battle against vested controlloit.

The People's Art Theater has included two modernistic plays by Gao Xingjian, a writer influenced by Jean Genet and Samuel Beckett. His "Warning Signal," performed with a minimum of props by actors in street clothes, tells of an unemployed young man who encounters his fiancee on a train that he has set out to rob. In a sensual scene unthinkable a few years ago, the lovers caress each other to the strains of electronic music. In the same author's "Bus Stop," eight people hang around 10 years waiting for a bus that turns out to have been canceled, a metaphor perhaps for the wasted decade of the Cultural Revolution. Such plays are clearly a break with the son tuchu, or "three promifluent English, sipping tea in a back be more prominent than just posi-room of the People's Art Theater. tive ones and that the most heroic tive ones and that the most beroic character must be most prominent

Given the difficulties of direct expression. Chinese playwrights with something to say have tended to hide behind history to convey a modern truth. Not that obliqueness always guaranteed ideological acceptance. The Cultural Revolution was lannched in 1966 after Mao construed "Hai Jui Dismissed From Office," an obscure Ming dynasty tale dramatized by Wu Han, as an attack on himself.

The allegorical device survives. Bai Hua, a playwright, got in trou-ble a couple of years ago for his blunt filmscript, "Unrequited Love," in which an artist returning home from abroad is hounded to death by radicals while the party stands by. The film was shot but never released and Bai had to write a self-criticism.

Bai has rebounded with "The Shining Spear of the King of Wu and the Sword of the King of Yueh," an allegorical play about a king corrupted by power some 2,500 years ago. The play enjoyed a safe run last season in Benjing because everyone took it as an attack on the megalomamiacal rule of Mao. But Ying said that he wanted to see contemporary drama move beyond what he termed "this literature of conspiracy and historiography of insinuation."

A catalyst for experimentation have been the latest translations of Western plays denied the Chinese for so many years. Ymg observed that hua ju, or modern dialogue plays as contrasted with classical drams, also evolved in the early 20th century with translations of Shaw, Chekhov and Ibsen.

A prominent hit of 1981 was Measure for Measure," which featured Ying. Other translations of Shakespeare have included "Macbeth." "The Merchant of Venice," and now an operatic version of "Othello," complete with Chinese cymbals. Last year, the People's Art Theater also staged "The has made the biggest impact. Ying, who translated "Death of a Salesman" into the Beijing dialect of the 1940s, noted that "Death of a Salesman" contradicted the Chinese notion of a protagonist. "Willy Loman does everything that a self-respecting revolutionary cadre would not do. He brags, lies, has affairs with women, raises children in the wrong way and finally kills

Yet Willy Loman was a refreshing change, "After so many years of Jiang Qing, people are pro-grammed," Ying said. "When they see the main character, they expect him to be a goody-goody. This man does everything wrong and you still end up loving him." Miller's flashbacks that conveyed Willy Loman through time and space were also novel. Classi-cal Chinese drama likewise ignored physical constraints and offered ghosts. But modern Chinese theater which emerged in the early 20th century developed as a protest against fiddling with life's dimen-The People's Art Theater, which was founded 31 years ago, has been on the cutting edge of such change — buttressed by the prestige of such prominent theatrical figures as the Shanghai playwright Cao Yu. Like other theaters in China, it is cushioned with hefty government subsidies. "The great advantage of a permanent company like ours is that you really get to know each other. Each company, after years of working together, evolves its own style," Ying said. Overstaffing, which plagues almost every Chinese enterprise, has caused desperation among those who lost the salad years of their careers to the Cultural Revolution. "If an actor is not given a part for three productions in succession, he feels he has the right to complain," Ying said.

Some older actors in the compasage. What they mean to say is, I Shakespeare," Ying sighed. "With bave no message as a forerunner. Molière it was more difficult to about the Hitler era, and "The Visroles to younger talent." Some of added that the situation was improving How far reform in the Chinese theater can go remains unclear. Perhaps as a result of the recent changes, party ideologists have lately expressed alarm about creeping commercialism.

A seasoned actor earns an equivalent of about $75 a month. But some artists, particularly comedians who perform a popular dia-logue form called "cross talk," have slipped off to the provinces, rented a theater, put on their own show and pocketed up to $2,500 a week. Ying knew such actors. "They don't pay taxes. They don't even tell their group."

But Ying thought that the com-mercial side of theater should not be ignored. "We should make sure shows are attractive. There should be more diversity because of habits and age groups. Some conservatives will call anything they don't like commercial. But that's hopeless, because people want to be entertained?

With the precedent established, plays in China. A young director he enew was thinking of staging a cultural event, in the sense that it opens up new possibilities and gives people ideas about the next stage of development."

Chinese playwrights also needed the prestige of the theater to help their careers, Ying said. "In the next few years, I'll try to find the right writers and themes and do some directing. It's not like doing Shakespeare or Arthur Miller. You have to start from the very beginning. They may have a good story and beautiful characters, but they need help.

Ying hoped that the Chinese the ater was outgrowing the need for sloganeering. "In some cases, we have cast it off. In others, not so much. When a play has a political message not agreeable to everyone, we're in trouble because criticism in China is still political criticism Otherwise, we're not bothered."

Whatever the future holds, Ying does not expect China to revert to the years of ideologically strait laced theater. "I feel we're in for a period of stability, with no political movements, upheavals, struggles or conflicts, which tend to make life very tense no matter which side Ying hoped to see more Western you're on If that lasts for any anpreciable time, we will have more artistic theater. There's never a lack 'Amadeus." "But we shouldn't go of talent in China. It's whether you after the second-rate stuff," Ying have the right atmosphere, the right said. "Every production should be ambience for the talent to emerge."

capacities are being eroded. The accusation holds that world trade does more than substitute jobs in an efficient plant for those in an inefficient one. Instead, it argues, current trade patterns are inflicting large losses in manufacturing jobs on the American economy and, beyond that, losses in the ability to manufacture. Further, these losses are being aggravated by the policies that other countries -- meaning to promote their products.

That is the indictment. Does a rigorous examination of actual experience bear it out? In one word, no. The economist Robert Z. Lawrence, writing in the current issue of the Brookings Papers, carefully reviews the evidence and comes to several conclusions that deserve the attention of all the people now warming up for next year's election. In the crucial period of rapid change that began with the 1973 oil crisis and ended with the 1980 recession, the number of jobs in manufactur-ing rose slightly in the United States. It would have fallen but for the net gains in industrial jobs created by foreign trade.

The United States has not lost its comparative advantage in manufacturing; to the contrary. It has lost ground in certain industries -

American anxieties about imports arise those that are labor-intensive, capital-inten-from a feeling that U.S. basic manufacturing sive and dependent on well-known technolsive and dependent on well-known technologies. But, Mr. Lawrence finds, in the 1970s Americans developed capacities in high-technology sectors that more than compensated for the losses in older and simpler products.

There is a lot of pain and tension, unfortunately, in this process of shifting advantages and resources from familiar industries to the new ones. The degree of social distress has created an illusion of a general industrial decline. But it is an illusion, so far.

Since 1980, the pattern has changed. There have been two recessions, and the dollar's exchange rate has soared. That has made all American exports less competitive abroad because their prices have risen. With normal growth and a lower dollar, Mr. Lawrence concludes, manufacturing employment will recover with the rest of the economy.

But while he does not get into the subject, there is also a less optimistic corollary to that conclusion. If the dollar's exchange rate stays very high for a long time — a period of years the damage to export industries could well be more than temporary. High interest rates are holding the dollar up. That is another reason why it is important to get rates down.

The Female Soldier

There is something about the U.S. Army's and plumber. The timing may be coincidental attitude toward female soldiers that could lead a cynic to suspect it would not weep if they all up and left. Until 1977, when the Carter administration declared women eligible for all noncombat occupational specialties, there were not enough female soldiers to irritate apologists for "this man's army." Yet three years later the army, responding to congressional demands, had to order commanders to deal "swiftly and fairly" with sexual harassment.

That the women's dropout rate was higher than men's was ascribed to such harassment, to the male soldier's inability to accept women in untraditional jobs and to the strain of working under hostile scrutiny.

The response? To reduce the places where harassment, heckling and hostility could occur. Females are now denied access to 69 percent of all army jobs.

Some of the eliminated specialties may indeed be too ardnous for most women (and some men). But all of the 23 categories forbidden last year were described as "closed due to exposure to direct combat policy" — a policy that has tended to shrink and stretch with the times. And now, when male recruitment has met with special success, the army has further reduced the list to exclude jobs like electrician

Still, female soldiers are understandably upset.

Mary Evelyn Blagg Huey, the head of the Defense Advisory Committee on Women in the Services, recently wrote to Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger saying: "The closing of military occupations impacts negatively on career development for women, making their advancement difficult if not impossible. This 'domino effect' poses concerns for morale, enlistments and the continued success of the all-volunteer Army."

The army contends that specialties like interior electrician, carpenter, mason and plumber are combat-related because they are deployed in forward battle areas. But this is not always the case, which is why women are calling for greater refinement in the restrictions.

Mr. Weinberger, describing the situation to President Reagan during a meeting, was overbeard to say "All the criticism was that we are closing off too many jobs that were associated with combat. And so what we've done is say that until there is an actual imminence of war, there will be women grease monkeys, if they want to, and things like that."

Not an elegant statement, but it is a start. Now let Mr. Weinberger put it in writing.

It is indeed surprising that not a single advocate of international law and morality has so far demanded Moscow's arraignment on charges of wanton murder and inhumanity before the International Court at the Hague.

If we wait for the world to agree on showing Moscow what civilized people think of their behavior, we will wait forever. The whirr of commercial calculation drowns out the cries of indignation. ### U.S. War Powers Act

American Marines in Lebanon are now in a situation "where imminent involvement in hostilities is clearly indicated by the circumstances." The words quoted are taken directly from the War Powers Act, a post-Vietnam statute in which Congress claims a role in the dispatch of U.S. forces to areas of conflict or Ten days ago, Soviet leader Yuri Andropov announced a crucial change in the Soviet pro-posal. Mr. Andropov offered to "liquidate" the medium-range nuclear missiles which his government will remove from Europe if there's Andropov's offer not only removes the main justification for the Pershing-cruise deploy-ment, but represents the first time either super-power has offered to dismantle part of a new, state-of-the-art weapons system. In that sense it has the look of a striking precedent. Yet the Reagan administration responded with the customary ho-hum, terming it a propaganda ploy aimed at the West Germans, a delaying tactic to retard U.S. deployment plans.

The MiG Attack and the MX Don't Mix

NEW YORK — Right-wing hawks are calling President Reagan, once one of their own, "pusillan-imous" (from the Latin pusillus, meaning "very small," and animus, meaning "soul") in his response to the destruction of Korean Air Lines

Flight 7 by a Soviet fighter plane. But if Mr. Reagan is successful in his calculated attempt to capitalize on this Soviet atrocity to win congressional approval for the MX missile e will in fact be able to aim at the Soviet Union what its paranoically suspicious leaders are sure to regard as a first-strike weapon. That is not pusillanimous ("marked by contemptible timidity"); it is reckless to the point of

Mr. Reagan not only cited the Korean airliner and its 269 lost passengers as a reason why the MX should be built; in his emotional TV address, he also invoked the name of the late Senator Henry Jackson, an MX proponent who died the day after Flight was shot down.

These tactics flow from the growing difficulty the president faces in forcing the unnecessary and destabilizing MX through the various stages of congressional approval.

Actually, there is no link whatever between the "termination" of Flight 7 and the supposed need for the MX. If anything, the gross Soviet deed over the Sea of Okhotsk reflects Soviet fear, suspicion, insecurity and distrust - not the "aggression" Mr. Reagan repeatedly cited.

And Foreign Secretary Gromyko's stonewall remarks at Madrid, togeth-er with all the other Soviet bombast, sound much like "whistling past the graveyard" - desperate defiance, that is, of a world fearfully seen as threatening on all sides.

Against this paranoid leadership,
Mr. Reagan says it is now essential to pose the MX — 100 of them in the old Minuteman silos — as a deterrent to Moscow's bent for aggression. But the MCX is likely to have just the opposite effect.

The Soviet leaders know that both the Carter and the Reagan administrations failed to devise an invulnerable basing plan for the giant, 10-warhead missile. They know that, therefore, its supposed justification - to give the United States an invulnerable land-based deterrent force --has disappeared.

And they are altogether likely to draw the conclusion, plausible for such fearful and suspicious men, that the deployment of 100 MX missiles in the very silos once deemed vulnerable to Soviet attack means that the United States is planning to use them in a first strike.

(That, after all, is what the hardestline leaders of the Reagan Administration believe Moscow is planning to do with its heavy, multiple-warhead If, therefore, the Soviet leaders are intrinsically as aggressive as Mr. Rea-gan claims the Flight 7 incident demshing-2 medium-range nuclear mis-siles in West Germany. The Social Democratic Party continues to support NATO's 1979 "two-track" decision — to negotiate seriously with the Soviet Union in the hope of heading off installation of the missiles, but to deploy some medium-range missiles eventually if negotiations fail.

Yet we Social Democrats oppose U.S. and West German conservatives who are exploiting this decision in ways contrary to what was intended by NATO. Conservatives who consider it militarily essential to deploy Pershing-2 and cruise missiles assent to the arms control part of the twotrack decison only because they hope in this way to make deployment politically acceptable.

concede that deployment is one reaction to the Soviet SS-20 missiles aimed at Western Europe but still doubt whether land-based missiles in Europe and the proposed mix of Pershing-2 and cruise missiles is militarily necessary. We also doubt that their ployment is politically sensible.

We originally supported the possi-bility of deployment mainly because we hoped to move the superpowers toward serious negotiations on medium-range missiles. At the time, in 1979, we also wanted to facilitate ratification of the second strategic arms limitations treaty and to demonstrate that the alliance was capable of acting together on nuclear issues. At the same time, however — and ever since — we rejected any provision for "automatic" deployment of medium-range missiles.

Whether and how many of them should be deployed can be finally decided only when NATO as a whole and the German parliament in particular assess the outcome of the negotiations now taking place in Geneva. This was our policy in 1979 and it remains our policy today.

Several of the assumptions that underlay NATO's decision have changed since 1979. First, the decision was originally taken in a climate of detente. Now, however, the atmosphere has changed completely. Sec-ond, the Soviet Union has installed more SS-20's than NATO foresaw in 1979. Third, the second Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty, whose ratification was then taken for granted, never passed the U.S. Senate.

Finally, the negotiations on medi-um-range missiles did not begin until the end of 1981, two years later than ment, contributed we originally hoped. This delay and New York Times.

The Soviet Union has clearly surpassed NATO in the deployment of medium-range land-based missiles. But I doubt that Moscow can successfully use this advantage for politi-cal intimidation or blackmail. Why not? First, strategic nuclear weapons still provide a certain deterrent effect against such regional nuclear threats. Second, it remains entirely unclear what practical political or military benefits can be derived from regional

believes that the ideal solution would be a drastic reduction of Soviet SS-20's that would make it superfluous to deploy any new American medi-um-range missiles in Europe. The majority of our party would accept an agreement on the basis of the "walk in the woods" understanding taken last year by negotiators Paul Nitze and Yuli Kvitsinsky — a formula that would permit the deployment of cruise but not Pershings and drastically limit the total number of warheads on both sides.

Our ultimate goal is to avoid the deployment of Pershing-2 missiles and we remain critical of the American proposal now on the table in eva, which does not renounce their deployment. Why? First, because Pershing-2s are to be deployed only in West Germany - and it does us no good to single us out from the other NATO allies in Europe. Second, if NATO crosses this nuclear threshold, installing Pershings now to cover targets in Eastern Europe, it might pre-empt the possibility of eventually using missiles with con-ventional warheads to cover those targets. Deploying the Pershing-2 now would thus jeopardize future efforts to construct an effective conventional defense of Western Europe.

Death Permeates the Atmosphere in Washington By David S. Broder

WASHINGTON—The members of Congress are returning to a capital strikingly different in atmosphere from the one they left at the start of their recess in early August. Death is in the air, and its sobering effects can be felt everywhere.

The summer ended with trip-hammer blows: the systematic shelling and killing of the U.S. Marines on "peacekeeping duty" in Lebanon; the murderous Soviet destruction of the Korean airliner, killing 269 persons, including Representative Larry Mc-Donald of Georgia; and the sudden, unexpected death of Senator Henry M. Jackson of Washington.

As is always the case, such tragedy has shamed the pettiness out of Washington politics. The atmosphere of soured partisanship Congress left behind when it took its August break has been transformed into a sense of shared concern and sobered realism.

President Reagan has been at his finest through this ordeal. Whether comforting the families of the slain Marines, expressing the nation's regrets at Scoop Jackson's death, or voicing the outrage everyone felt at the cold-blooded attack on the Korean airliner and its innocent passen-

What gave special poignancy to Mr. Reagan's impressive performance was that it so perfectly embodied the principles and even the personal style of Scoop Jackson, the man he mourned as "a true patriot." Mr. Jackson was the least theatrical of public men. His friend and colleague, Senator Daniel Patrick Moynihan of New York, once described Mr. Jackson as having "the charisma of competence." He was right about that, just as history proved him right on other issues. Infallible he was not, but on most of the large questions to which he turned his ever-active intelligence, his judgment was awfully good. Most of all, he was realistic. He allowed himself few illusions, which made him especially valuable in a week like last week, when so many others found themselves disillusioned to the point of distraction.

"He lived in the worst of times," his friend Pat Moynihan said at last week's memorial service here, "the age of the totalitarian state. He wanted his country strong because he knew the terrible danger of the age in which we live. Where others jurch from one issue to another with the attention span of a five-year-old, he sustained this understanding and this vision through five of the most awful decades in the history of mankind."

Mr. Reagan was displaying those "Jacksonian" qualities last week—steadiness, strength and clarity—at a time when we needed them most.

U.S. Has Comparative Advantage In the High-Creativity' Industries

EW YORK — Talk has it that the United States is losing ground in the race to develop the fast-growth, high-technology industries known as M-1, fell $2$ billion in the critical to economic success. But the evidence mustered by economists latest reporting week, the Federal Federal tends to support the opposite thesis; that the United States has a longstanding comparative advantage in what ought to be called "high-it pay for royalties and fees, and has more scientists and engineers per capita devoted to research and development than other country. This advantage stems mainly from economic roots, and two special strengths stand out:

First, to be successful in tomorrow's industries, you have to be good at managing creative professionals. Americans are. It means you need player-managers to direct creative units. They are people capable of giving substantive guidance, not just formal, control-oriented oversight.
You see it in sports, the movies and the arts: Bill Russell with the Celtics, Sylvester Stallone and "Rocky" and Bernstein conducting Bernstein. Second, you need expert translators, people who can span the gap between the scientists, engineers and designers who are creating new

Fondness for Small Business

Why should the United States be better than most countries in managing creative professionals? Here are a few observations:

• Americans like small businesses and respect people who run them.

Even very large, ostensibly hierarchical high-creativity companies seek to stimulate a small-business attitude in new product units. • Americans expect creative professionals to have fun, so enlightened managements set up buffers to protect creative people from dull bureaucrats who dislike change.

 Americans are team players. And creative professionals generally work best as a part of teams.

 Venture capital is there for bright ideas. Abroad, it is skimpy.
 Evidence: In 1982, 130 U.S. venture-capital companies had $2.6 billion of investments. Similar investments came to less than $300 million in Britain and Japan together, according to recent estimates. • The United States is a magnet for creative professionals from other countries, frustrated by outdated management styles. But well-managed professionals are not enough. That's why good translators are needed.

Educating Potential Customers

To begin with, they organize people to educate potential customers, ften businessmen and women who may lack sufficient technical training to be informed buyers of high-creativity products and services.

since without adequate financing, creative shops break up. Finally, they communicate with government and regulators. But even those who grant that the United States's comparative advantage is real are worried about two questions:

First, if other countries achieve some technological breakthroughs, can the United States lose that advantage quickly? Answer: Relax, copy and adapt. To be first is not necessary to be most profitable.

The second question is, how does this high-creativity advantage help in the slow-growth, smokestack industries? Answer: Retire slow learners. Then get new top management that will install the high-creativity products and services that will make the processes more productive. What's really needed are good listeners to absorb what the translators are

Fed Says M-1 Fell $2 Billion

The Associated Press NEW YORK - The narrowest latest reporting week, the Federal Reserve Board reported Friday. The drop means all three money measures watched by the Federal Reserve are well within long-term

This brings all three of the Ms (M-1, M-2 and M-3) comfortably within their respective target ranges and virtually rules out tight-ening by the Fed in the weeks ahead," said David M. Jones, economist at Anbrey G. Lanston & Co. "Even if the expected bulge occurs next week the $3.4-billion drop the people who are capable past two weeks gives the Fed plenty of room to absorb it."

Next week's reporting period will cover the first week of September, when transfer payments such as Social Security enter the M-1

But the latest week's drop in M-1 leaves it growing at roughly 81/2 percent for the year through August, within the Fed's 5-9 percent

The dollar dropped in New York after the announcement, with it falling to 2.6625 Deutsche marks from 2.6835 the day before and to $1.4945 against the pound from $1.4915 Thursday.

The Fed also reported that the broader measure of money known as M-2 rose $10.8 billion in August for an annual growth rate through August of 8 percent, compared to the target of 7-10 percent. Government bonds, which already had been up on the week, rose 11/2-2 points after the report and bill yields were down by 20-30

"The Fed can now mark time to see if the economy slows so it can reach its goal of a more sustainable and noninflationary recovery," Mr. Jones said.

M-1, comprised of cash and checking and similar accounts was a seasonally adjusted average of $513.3 billion in the week ended Aug. 31, compared with $515.3 bilhon the previous week. M-2, which is comprised of M1

An open letter to Shirlstar Container Transport Ltd. from Trans Container Services AG.

Sir Benjamin Slade, Chairman, Shirlstar Container Transport Ltd., 7 Swallow Street, London W1R 7HD.

Trans Container Services AG accepts the challenge implied in the statement made by Tony Levene in the 4th September 1983 edition of the Sunday Times.

Naturally, we think our performance on behalf of our container owning clients is superior to that of any other container management company in Europe. Since you obviously do not feel the same way, an audited performance analysis is the only reasonable way to settle the main issues.

The basis of the competition is that an audit of several of the all important yardsticks of container leasing management by one or more auditing companies should take place immediately based on the results of the last fiscal year ending 31st March 1983. Both companies participating in the performance audit will choose their own auditors from the World's recognised "big eight" auditing firms. One point will be awarded to the company with the best performance for each item listed below. The company who is placed second will donate to a recognised charity of the winner's choice, £10,000,00.

The items to be measured are:

- 1. Overall utilisation performance for the twelve month period based upon the total containers available for leasing in the respective fleets (including those stored at factories) added to containers under repair in depots and divided by the total number of containers in the fleet.
- 2. The actual rentals (excluding the portion attributable to damage insurance) invoiced to shipping companies for the year in question, expressed as a percentage of the retail sales value (see paragraph 3 below) for all containers in
- 3. The average net return to container owners expressed as a percentage of the original retail purchase price paid to the management company. Containers which belong to the management company will be deemed to have the same retail value as those sold to investors and subject to the same charges. Only actual amounts collected from shipping companies, net of so called "in house guarantees" will be considered for this purpose after provisions for management fees, unrecoverable damages, wear and tear and refur-

- 4. The Average number of days in which rental invoices to shipping companies remained outstanding from their date of invoicing to the shipping line.
- 5. The average contribution per container to owners by the management company for collected drop off charges. positioning revenue, lift on and lift off charges which are invoiced to shipping companies, (some companies fail to report this income to the investor).
- 6. The number of containers in each fleet which have been uprated to 24 tons and qualify for CSC plating in preparation for the enforcement of the convention for safe containers and ratified by the members of the CSC Committee of the United Nations, expressed as a percentage of each fleet.
- 7. The ratios attributable to container leasing operations which typically measure financial strength, operating efficiency and liquidity of the company taken from the respective company's balance sheets and profit and loss statements adjusted for accounting policy differences.
- 8. A comparison of the internal management systems in effect at each company designed to motivate employees, control overall performance and ensure that no conflict of interest exists between containers owned by the management company and those owned by private investors.

Both companies participating in the performance audit agree to publish the results of the audit in at least two major national and two major international newspapers in addition to circularising all container owning clients of their respective companies within 30 days of the results becoming available. The costs of publishing to be borne equally by both companies.

Since the results of this competition, no doubt, are of paramount importance to our respective investors, TCS would be grateful to hear of your Company's acceptance or rejection of this challenge within the next ten days.

How about it, Sir Ben? Is it not the right time to reveal to investors what our respective companies have done for them, rather than what they have done for us? What could be more

Three main points have been there has never been the oil-price

BUSINESS BRIEFS

Major Investment Banking Concerns Flock to Bid for Chrysler Warrants

DETROIT (UPI) — Virtually every major investment banking firm on Wall Street has joined one of three groups planning to bid for 14.4 million federally held warrants on Chrysler Corp. stock, it was reported Friday. The warrants will be sold Monday to the highest bidder. The Detroit Free Press said Morgan Stanley & Co. is leading a group of eight firms and First Boston Corp. is heading up a second group of 10 companies.
Goldman Sachs & Co. and Prudential Bache Securities have formed a third group.

Chrysler is still deciding whether to put in a bid. Robert S. Miller, executive vice president for finance, said the automaker will "keep watching things until the last minute." Each warrant holds the right to purchase one share of Cirysler stock at $13. The automaker's shares are now worth about $30.

Mattel Loss Is Bigger Than Forecast

NEW YORK (NYT) — Mattel Inc., whose video-game business declined sharply last spring, amounced a loss of $156.1 million for the linest mouths ended July 31, substantially more than it had projected.

Mattel, which also makes toys and home computers, said Thursday that the loss resulted almost entirely from the decline in sales of its videogame player and game cartridges.

The company had an after-tax loss in the first quarter of $20.4 million.

in the year-earlier second quarter, the company earned $17.1 million, or of 1985.

He also said he sees no reason for a rise in production ceilings of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries for the fourth quarter. The OPEC monitoring committee, of which he is chairman, meets next Thursday in Vienna.

Previously, Mr. Oteiba, who was in England to address an energy seminar, has said the ceiling could be raised by up to one million barrels.

Talks Fail to Solve Marc Rich Dispute BERN (Renters) — A jurisdictional dispute involving Marc Rich and Co. has yet to be solved following talks here this week, and talks will continue through diplomatic channels, a joint Swiss-U.S. statement said

A New York court has ordered documents of Marc Rich, a commod-Titles-trading firm, to be subpoensed for examination by a federal grand jury investigating whether the Swiss-based company evaded tax in the United States. Swiss prosecutors last month seized papers that Marc Rich was preparing to send to comply with the order, saying the transfer could infringe Swiss economic secrecy law. This week's meeting examined whether a new Swiss law that provides for assistance to foreign authorities investigating offences that would be crimes in Switzerland could solve the conflict. It also looked at bilateral

Takeover by Tymshare Is Approved

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Communications Commission has approved the acquisition of French-owned FTC Communications Inc. by Tymshare Inc., bolstering Tymshare's efforts to enter the international communications market, and satisfying a commission requirement that FTC become a U.S.-owned company by Dec. 31, 1984.

The agreement, approved Thursday, will give Tymshare an 80 percent ownership interest in FTC. The remaining 20 percent will be held by the current owner, a private French bank known as Via Banque. Tymshare is a computer-services company and also owns the largest U.S. microwave television concern

According to the commission's order, Tymshare is acquiring 10,000 shares of stock in FTC for $5 million, and has also agreed to provide an immediate $5-miltion line of credit to the company. The order also states, however, that Tymshare will acquire another 6,000 shares of FTC stock for an undisclosed price, bringing its total to 80 percent of the shares

Yugoslavia, Western Banks Sign Agreement on Debt Restructuring

By John Tagliabue New York Times Service

BONN — Yugoslavia's about 600 Western creditor banks have agreed on a debt-restructuring the principal of previous loans package that includes $600 million in fresh loans to help the nation's ailing economy.

The agreement, involving about $2 billion of credits, is the last block in a complex aid package assembled in recent months by commercial banks, international financial institutions and Western governments to insure that Yugoslavia can make repayment on its foreign debt of $20 billion.

[The agreement was signed Friday at the headquarters of Manufacturers Hanover Trust Co. in New York.]

They said the banks had also agreed to keep open short-term trade-credit lines of $1.2 billion until the end of 1984.

The new arrangement is expected to increase Yugoslavia's total foreign debt, including what it owes to governments, to about $20.5 billion, the bankers said. Yugoslav officials have estimated that servicing the nation's debt will cost about $5 billion this year.

The money involved in the current rescheduling package is owed via this year. That would enable to 550 to 600 banks scattered acrosss the Western world, though bank officials said that not all the

GM Submits Proposals Floating Rate Notes For Venture in Algeria

DETROIT — General Motors Corp. has asked the Algerian gov-erament for permission to form a joint venture in Algeria to assemble 100,000 cars and trucks annually by 1987, a company official said. W.C. Mott, executive vice president of the company's overseas unit, said: "We're very interested in doing business in Algeria." He said GM agents will meet with government representatives this month to discuss its request. Car industry sources said GM is one of 15 international makers of cars and light trucks to respond to an Algerian communiqué for proposals on a joint project. According to Mr. Mott, GM would have a minority equity stake with the government retaining a majority interest.

He said GM proposes to build a car, light-van and pickup-truck as-sembly plant and a sheet-metal stamping facility about 200 kilome-lers (124 miles) from Oran in westera Algeria. It also proposes to set

TIKE so many truly great artists. Chekhov left

Le behind a prodigious body of work that testified to both the depth and the prodigality of his talent. He once recalled that when he was beginning his literary career, writing came as easily as eating pancakes, and though he was also working full time as a doctor, he managed to write hundreds of short pieces of fiction. This not only had the practical effect of helping him to support his sprawling, needy family, but it also made for a kind of intense literary apprenticeship that swiftly honed his writing skills. Indeed the asset of this new collection is that it shows just how the mature writer of such masterpieces as "Gooseberries" and "The Lady with the Pet Dog" developed in his youth.

English-language collection devoted exclusively to the work produced by Chekhov during his early and mid-20s, a period in which some nine-tenths of his published fiction was written. Though the selection made by Patrick Miles and Harvey Pitcher seems somewhat arbitrary at times — such notable early works as "The Letter," "Agafya," and "The Privy Councilor" are missing — they have done an admirable job of translation and have also provided helpful notes on the background and publication history of individual stories

Many of the earliest stories in this volume are really no more than quick offhand sketches narrative equivalents of what courtroom artists produce with a few strokes of the pen. Others resemble the sort of casual reporting pieces one finds in the New Yorker's Talk of the Town section. Though Chekhov's keen reportorial eye is already in evidence, such stories as "The Death of a Civil Servant," "The Daughter of Albion" and "A Dreadful Night" are very much the work of a young man experimenting with words. The humor, while delightfully grotesque at times, tends toward the slapstick — a groveling government employee that his strengths lay not so much in the orchestration of dramatic events, as in his poetic ability to evoke atmosphere and mood, to portray characters with both objectivity and compassion. And with "The Huntsman," published in 1885, and "The Witch," published in 1886, he seems to have discovered that short stories do not need sharp resolutions or tricked-up plots, that jokes, too, are unnecessary - there is more than enough comedy to be found in the tragic day-to-day lives of ordinary human be-

point of view of both the man and the woman.

Chekhov's characters all, in fact, have intimations that some form of beauty and meaning has eluded gives them a sense of incompleteness and loss. A murderer talks to his guards about the new life he will one day invent for himself in Siberia ful girl who, in a moment of mistaken identity, embraced him and gave him a glimpse of love ("The Kiss"), and a provincial girl declares her love for a young man, only to have him turn cold and depart from her life forever ("Verochka"). Time has passed these characters by, and they realize that their dreams and ideals are irretrievable, that they exist now only in the past.

This is a theme, of course, that Chekhov would develop with consummate mastery in his later plays and fiction, but already in some of these early stories, he has begun to bring it to fruition.

Even in his mature plays, Chekhov demonstrated

With these two stories, Chekhov has also begun to let his characters speak for themselves, instead of willfully manipulating their actions. Certainly the degree of psychological complexity achieved in such later stories as "Man in a Shell" is still lacking, but Chekhov nonetheless shows a remarkable gift for delineating, in just a few pages, his characters' state of mind. In "The Witch," the reader feels both the frustration of the subdeacon's wife, who is trapped in the provinces and married to a boor, and her husband's growing sense of impotence and resentment. The sadness of the mismatched couple in "The Huntsman" is similarly conveyed from the

The Dolphins are not likely to find New England's defense among the best in the league. The Patriots opened the season by losing in overtime, 29-23, to the Baltimore Colts. The Patriots gave up 172 yards rushing and 283 yards passing, and lost the game when the linebacker Johnie Cooks returned a fumble by Tony Collins 52 yards for a touchdown.

The Patriots are the only team the Colts have beaten in the last three seasons. Baltimore did not win a game in 1982 and was 2-14 in 1981. Both victories were over the Patriots.

New Orleans Saints (1-0) at Los Angeles Rams (1-0): The Saints showed at least two reasons why things may be different this season. In their victory over St. Louis, a rather sound defensive team, George Rogers ran 24 times for 206 yards, and Dave Wilson, the reserve quar-terback, who was injured last season, completed 7 of 11 for 121 yards in place of Kenny Stabler, who left early in the game with a bruised knee. Cleveland Browns (0-1) at Detroit Lions (1-0): Both teams' openers were indications of things to come. The Browns, who lost to Minnesota 27-21, have a stronger offense than defense; the Lions, who beat Tampa Bay, have a stronger defense than offense. Which makes this game a tough call. ## Inside China — Second Generation

Paul Pasqualini's Book Continues a Family Saga

By Vicky Elliott

Paris — Paul Pasqualini
Came to Paris from Beijing in 1978, but his wife caught up with him only last year. She could have come earlier, but she was afraid because of what she'd read in the newspapers. She'd heard that in Europe, husbands sell their wives.

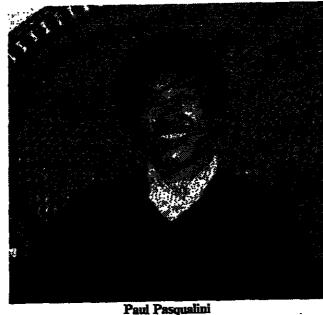

But misconceptions are manufactured all over the world. Pasqualini remembers seeing French television documentaries on China when he first arrived and secing the pictures of a wealthy Shanghai party functionary with a washing machine, portrayed as if he were a bona fide worker. He knew, even though he couldn't understand the program fully, that they were getting it wrong. Pasqualini came here with French nationality and only a few words of French, but he has shed his speechless shyness and seems at home. "I wanted to write a book to show foreigners what normal life in China is like," he says today, the foreign words flowing easily. His wife is at his side, obviously disabused of some of her original prejudices, and his book is on the white tablecloth. Pasqualini wrote it with the help of a Chinese-speaking French diplomet who wrote under the name of Horace Hatamen, and with the help of his own prodi-gious memory. "You don't forget those things," he says. "They're burnt into you like linen branded with a hot iron." His book, "Son of Prisoner of Mao," (published in French earlier this year by Plon) is subtitled "New Tribulations of a Citizen of the People's Republic." It tells the Dickensian story of his fa-theriess family in the 1950s and 60s - how, when he was 11, he hauled back bricks from Beijing's wall to make a bed he could sleep in with his mother and younger brother; how one day, sickened by the endless meals of thin gruel, he poured ink into his meagre rations; how he learned to pick a pocket and was pleasantly sur-prised by the home comforts he found at the reform school he was Chinese in the poverty-ridden 1950s, as the government of Mao Zedong faltered under the Great Leap Forward. But Xiao Mao his Chinese name - was laboring under a special difficulty: his father Jean, son of a Corsican trader and his well-born Manchu wife, was arrested in 1956, just after the false spring of the Hundred Flowers, and spent eight years in prison as a counter-revolutionary for his associations with Beijing's foreign community.

That story went on record in 1973, after Pasqualini senior had been released at the insistence of the French authorities and packed off on a steamer to Marseilles. His book about his prison life ("Prisoner of Mao") sold well in France and the United States and was later made into a film. It was too soft for the critics of Communist China, and too tepid for Western Maoists, but it had a fierce honesty about it that demanded respect.

Jean Pasqualini, fussing over his reunited family, recalls today how his son came to see him in prison in 1962, "wearing a pair of sandals much too big for him, a atched shirt and broken pants."

him; his brother had brought a packet of biscuits left over from Chinese New Year. "I promised myself that once I had the means, I'd pay them back a hundred-fold," he says. "In those days, I didn't know how I'd do it."

Growing up under the taint of his family origins, Paul managed to win a brief burst of fame by being the first in his neighborhood to post a dazibao or wall poster, at the outset of the Cultural Revolution. Anticipating his detractors, he posted a message that pointed out that though his father was French, Xiao Mao was Chinese, "After that, I was a little chief," he says. "I was young, and there was nothing in my head." But his suspect origins kept him from joining the Red Guards.

His stickiest moment came when an act of counter-revolutionary sabotage was detected at the book-binding factory he was working in. One shipment of speeches had been defaced, by the application of two telltale stigma of hardened glue on the frontispiece portrait of Chairman Mao. A worker had already been severely punished for picking up a portrait of the leader and atnoting to flush it away in the communal toilets. Confession sessions of the entire work force followed, and the list of suspects was narrowed down to Pasqua-lini, who lived under the shadow of it for two years. It was only much later that he was told casually by a superior that the inci-dent had resulted from a mechanical error.

"China is all right as long as nothing is happening politically," young Pasqualini says today. "People are very friendly until the political pressure starts, and then they begin to exaggerate things and try to make things as difficult and try to make things as unitarians as possible for you." The families of dubious origin go first. "We were outcasts, political parials," Jean says bitterly. "Every time one of my sons gets a bit dissatisfied," he continues, playing the patriarch, "I tell them, just a few years ago, you worked a hell of a lot more for a hell of a lot less." It was only when special repre-

mond Barre, the French prime minister, on a visit to Beijing in 1978, that Paul obtained the exit visa he had been trying to get since 1972. His brother, Antoine, followed three years later. Paul now teaches Chinese at the Ecole Polytechnique and has taken up work again as a plumber since the restaurant he ran with his brother closed this summer. He still seems surprised that tomatoes of the same quality cost different prices in different places, but he knows which Paris market gives the best value in Chinese cab-

sentations were made by Ray-

He has two more books to write, he says, one describing his experiences when he first arrived in France and the other a more ambitious saga starting with Imperial China and inspired by the history of his own family. It would feature his grandfather, a recluse whose servants protected him for years from the outside world and who never discovered that the old coins with a hole were no longer valid currency. There will be warlords and a stubborn daughter thrown down a well because she refuses to marry the
